Outcomes
Community non-profit social service agencies are producing meaningful outcomes that are changing and saving lives.

Trends
Homelessness is a complex issue, with rising numbers and trends moving in the wrong direction—especially for unsheltered homelessness.

COVID-19 Concerns
COVID-19 requires urgency around finding solutions to assure public health and the prevention of loss of lives.

Action Needed
Social service non-profits need additional support to meet the increasing demand for services that are only beginning to be evident during the recession including:

- Increased funding (city, state, faith-based, individual, foundation and corporate)
- Increased volunteer and in-kind contributions
- Creative, innovative programming with meaningful outcome measures
- Equitable opportunity for all
- Advocacy (federal, state and local)
- Community awareness of the challenges and possible solutions

Partnerships
TCC, funded Agency Partners and the City of Tempe’s human service programs work together to provide quality services to end homelessness.
Tempo Community Council’s grant allocation process known as Agency Review partners with the City of Tempe to provide funding to address human service needs in the community. Grant dollars are provided through City of Tempe budgeted tax dollars/revenue and Tempe Community Council and Together Tempe contributions.

Just one outcome measure is highlighted from FY 2018/19 reports to illustrate the variety of work our partner agencies provide Tempe citizens.

(National Alliance to End Homelessness and Community Solutions)
With the spread of COVID-19, people experiencing homelessness (in shelters and unsheltered) are facing serious threats of infection and are often at a higher rate of acute primary health care needs. Many homeless individuals can also be at a greater risk of infection and complications from infection. Human service providers are reporting the following challenges and concerns while responding to the COVID-19 crisis.

- Health and safety concerns for clients, volunteers and staff
- Feeding children who are out of school
- Securing proper and adequate cleaning supplies
- Securing proper personal protection for everyone
- Creating adequate space to self-isolate and physical distance
- Creating process and procedural changes to programs
- Acquiring rapid emergency funds
- Immediate need for unrestricted and flexible funds
- Maintaining staff/volunteers to remain operational (people sick or afraid to volunteer)
- Raising new funds (cancelled events and funders changing focus)
- Tech issues and support needed for new technology
- Clients access to technology
- Plummeting individual donations and volunteers
- How to help immigrants and undocumented people who won’t receive stimulus checks
- Need for funders to relax grant restrictions and outcomes
- Disconnection of support services, like substance treatment
- Disparities to access to services – especially racial disparities
- Mental health support for staff and clients
- People losing their work-based health care
- Concerns about reopening too soon

Partner agencies serving individuals and families experiencing homelessness report the following specific concerns for this population.

- A need for additional funds to prevent more people from becoming homeless during this crisis
- Unrestricted funds that can be used creatively to keep people housed, and to provide diversion from homelessness
- Increase diversion (from shelter) activities (e.g. reunification with family, travel and gas expenses)
- Additional shelter options for families and individuals
- Hotel options for symptomatic people and the very vulnerable
- Housing (all varieties)
- Addressing serious issues with quarantining people in their programs
- Moral and public health imperative to provide basic needs (e.g. showers, food, water, safe sleeping)
- McKenney Vento families and resources are not easily accessible when school is out
- Youth disconnected from school and less safe (homeless and foster care)
- Telemedicine and mental health services needed (clients lack access to technology)
